Allow me to avail myself of this opportunity for expressing, through the press, my sincere appreciation for having been invited to participate in the annual convention of the American Society of Civil Engineers. I have been for some time, now, a resident of the city of Chicago, and I have been very glad to have the opportunity to become acquainted with the members of the society, and being an Italian-born, it is to the

There was a time when the United States was a nation of immigrants. The great majority of the people who lived in this country were born in other countries. They came here for a better life, for a better future, for a better chance to make a better life for themselves and for their families.
